THE MAGNETIC PROPERTIES OF WATER

by Marcel Vogel

When it moves, water creates a weak, but measureable magnetic field. This measureable field is utilized by those who wish to detect subterranean moving bodies of water. This form of detection is called DOWSING.

A person dowsing for a body of water will hold in each of his extended hands a metal or wooden rod. When he comes over a body of water, his physical body responds to this weak field, usually through a muscular movement, causing the rods to jerk. This type of field is real and has been measured by Professor Tromp. His findings have been published in a book called PSYCHICAL PHYSICS.

In our laboratory we have been studying the effect of water as it spins around a coil made of stainless steel or copper. We have been able to measure this weak, but perceptible magnetic field created by the moving body of water with the use of a mi[illegible]-gaussmeter.

The graph on page two gives a vivid description of the fields we have detected in the space that surrounds an 8 inch stainless steel coil.

The graph below gives a vivid description of the fields we have detected in the space that surrounds an 8 inch stainless steel coil.

When we place a crystal, programmed with specific information, into a body of moving water, a field builds up and comes to a critical charge at which point it allows information to be transferred from the crystal to the fluid. This creates a uniquely charged state in the water. This can be done with wine as well as other fluidic materials. The liquid is now structured. This means that through the medium of the very weak, but significant field created by moving, fluidic material, an information exchange can be effectuated with a specially cut crystal. We have designed and made such crystals for applications of this type in our laboratory.

In his book entitled LETTERS ON OD AND MAGNETISM, published in 1852, (again in 1964 by Health Research, Mokelumne Hill, California), Carl Reichenbach spoke of the luminescence or light, emitted by moving bodies of fluidic material. He called this light an "odic force."

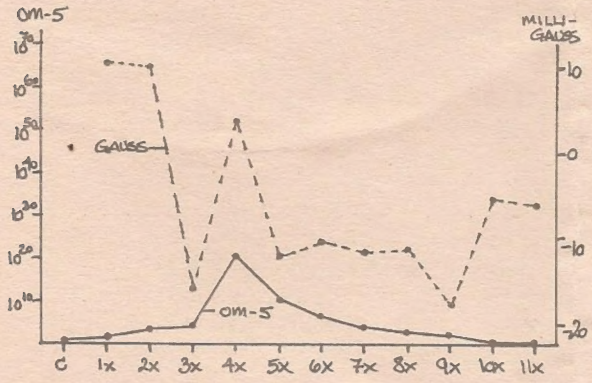
Working in complete darkness, Reichenbach took a glass barometer tube and put one end of it in a glass of water. The other end he submitted to a few minutes of friction from a rapidly revolving stone of a lathe. He found that the whole tube together with the glass of water became luminous. A sensitive person tasting this water found it warm, rather bitter and not too pleasant.



The solid line represents the information in water. The dotted line shows the magnetic field. At 4X both lines indicate a peak which is the moment of structuring.

He had a volunteer drink the entire contents and shortly afterwards she began to vomit and become violently ill. According to Reichenbach, the friction of liquids gives evidence of the presence of an odic force, a luminescence, observable in complete darkness. He found this true not only for water, but for alcohol, ether, acetone and turpentine.

Water kept in a stopped bottle became luminous while being shaken, and returned to normal shortly after the shaking was discontinued.

In complete darkness, Reichenbach had a sensitive individual hold a glass tube covered with paper while he poured water through the tube from a glass funnel. The sensitive found that warmth came to him through the paper as long as water continued to be poured through and that coolness immediately returned when he stopped pouring. When the experiment was done in the dark, the water became luminescent in the funnel during the act of pouring and the whole length of the tube also was luminous. So we have a visible emission of light observed by sensitives in complete darkness or a magnetic field being created by a moving body of water.

When one uses this phenomena, one can store information in water using a crystal or the light of the sun or the thought of an individual.

Our knowledge of water becomes more mysterious and exciting the deeper we study and observe it. Its makeup is so simple, being only 2 atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen. But without water there is no life and I believe it is from water that all life on this planet has risen.

When you hold your hands above your food and bless the food, YOU CHANGE THE VERY SUBSTANCE OF THE FOOD WITH YOUR THOUGHTS and thus prepare the food for assimilation and digestion by your body. In blessing your food, you are vitalizing that food with your own life energy and giving to that food the vibration necessary for life and proper assimilation.

One would never think that the water we drink has magnetic properties to it, but it does. The Russians have found they can reduce the hardness or calcium deposit in water by applying a magnetic field to the water being fed into the boilers of a ship, sharply reducing the formation of boiler scale.

This is only the beginning of a myriad of methodologies of information transfer that water can effect. For example, we are looking to put the very essence of a fertilizer into the water to stimulate the growth of a plant. And, we have observed in our own laboratory the deliberate modification of the growth pattern of radishes by the program we have placed in the water being fed into the control chambers for the radishes. This offers infinite possibilities for new forms of plant hybridization and growth.

We speak of Holy Water coming from special people or special parts of the world, but you can prepare your own Holy Water. Hold a glass of water in your hands and bless it with the thought of love and well-being. When this is done, the water takes on a complete flavor and taste differentiation. Our thoughts are stored in the very molecular form and vibration of the water molecules themselves. We are studying in our lab how this takes place and the way we can apply this knowledge for the good of humanity.

EXPERIMENT #81

Materials:

Pitcher of water
2 glasses

Go into a dark room with a pitcher of water and two glasses. Allow yourself plenty of time for your eyes to become accustomed to the dark, an hour if necessary. Now take and pour the water from the pitcher into the glass and observe what takes place. Now pour back and forth from glass to glass again and again and you will see the water glowing more and more brightly until it comes to a peak.

Now pour a little bit of the water from the pitcher slowly into the other glass and notice that there is little light. Taste that water and taste the water that you have seen light up and observe the difference in taste. This is what Reichenbach called the Odic light, fire by friction. It is a cold light, or luminescence.

EXPERIMENT #82

Materials:

6 feet of copper wire
2 6" square metal plates
soldering gun
metal bell (optional)

Take the copper wire and solder it to the metal plate. Take this along with the other plate and the assistant into a dark room. Have the helper hold the bare end of the copper wire in his left hand and rub the plate with the other plate. When this is done properly, the person holding the wire should feel a warmth going through the wire which should also light up, becoming luminous. This is again the force being created by friction. If you want, at the same time, strike a metal bell with a hammer or sound the bell in the dark and, if your eyes are properly adapted to the dark, you will see the bell light up and become luminous. This was reported in chapter 9 by Reichenbach in the work he did on Od and Magnetism. (Taken from LETTERS ON OD AND MAGNETISM, Baron Carl von Reichenbach, 1852 and 1964 by Health Research, Mokelumne Hill, California).

RECOMMENDED READING

EARTH AND MAN, by Karl Koenig, Bio-Dynamic Literature, Wyoming, Rhode Island, 1982.

This book contains a set of lectures by Dr. Karl Koenig, many of which constitute important building stones in the development of Camphill in the past. Several of the lectures were given in conjunction with the Bio-Dynmic Farming and Gardening Association in Great Britain. Dr. Koenig was a student of Rudolph Steiner. The wonderful things about this book are the lessons we can learn from the study of the plant, the tree and even the simple insect, since each is an expression of Divine life.

An excellent article worth reading "Earthquakes and Nuclear Testing: Dangerous Patterns and Trends," by Gary Whiteford, Ph.D., reveals frightening statistics of the correlation between major earthquakes following within five days of nuclear bomb testing.

Dr. Whiteford's research has been made available in "Pulse of the Planet," "Wildfire," and "The Globe and Mail." An interesting excerpt from the last article: ".....the planet is now like an addict hooked on its nuclear bomb fix," (bombs, for the past 25 years, have been going off on the average of every 7.3 days), "releasing earthquake energy prematurely because of the explosions. But what happens if we stop testing? Will the old pattern of higher-magnitude quakes return?"

THE MARCEL VOGEL RESEARCH ENDOWMENT FUND

In the last issue of the P.R.I. Newsletter (Vol. 7 #2), Marcel Vogel and Jennet Grover provided an overview of P.R.I.'s current projects and future goals.

Whereas the focus of these projects was to secure operational funding for the laboratory via commercial products (a worthwhile and self-sufficient approach), the idea of a Marcel Vogel Research Endowment Fund sounds like an ideal approach to fit P.R.I.'s needs.

The Endowment Fund concept is designed to amass a trust fund in perpetuity for research and pilot programs for crystal applications.

The advantage of the Endowment Fund is that it is simpler and research-oriented versus product (commercially), oriented. Either way, funding is required, but the sources may be different.

Dan Zavela,
P.R.I. Corporate Secretary

The Marcel Vogel Research Endowment Fund has been initiated to enable P.R.I. Laboratories to become self-sufficient by our next fiscal year. This will allow us to devote ourselves to research, our main purpose.

We have already procured start-up funds for an endowment account which has been opened at Dean Witter in San Jose, California. We have also found a way in which A.T. & T.'s long distance services can contribute to our cause with a fund-raising project that will be described in our next Newsletter.

Your tax-deductible donations (where permitted), may be sent to Psychic Research, Inc. and checks should be made out either to P.R.I. or to Dean Witter F.B.O. Psychic Research, Inc.

Thank you for your support.

EGYPT EXPERIENCES

Egypt was a deja vu experience for me. Wherever I went, I felt like I had been there before. I travelled throughout the trip as if in a dream. I am deeply grateful to have travelled to Egypt with Dr. Vogel. I feel his energy was a touchstone for me to connect with more than the eye could see. I have a photo of Dr. Vogel and one of his crystals which epitomizes the deeper mysteries of life that I was taking in without realizing it at the time.

It is only now, four months later, that deep impressions of ancient Egypt are beginning to arise in my conscious awareness.

Visiting Karnak was like slipping back in time. It brought back memories of Cecil B. Demilles epic "The Ten Commandments" of Moses before Pharaoh. What a feeling to walk the Avenue of the Sphinxes, seeing the Obelisk and entrance pylon of the Temple! To realize that it had been completed three thousand years ago, and begun three thousand years before that. The light show really gave us the feeling of being there. The music, voices, the night mixed with the shadows and the full moon was awe-inspiring. We travelled with good companions and felt as though we were in good hands all along the way.

Even now I find it difficult to describe all that took place on this wonderful trip. As advertised, it turned out to be a real "Spiritual Reunion in Egypt." The first few days at home were full of memories of the trip. Dreams were full of faces and people in Egypt. Emotions so strong tears would come to my eyes for experiencing such strong energies. A raising of the consciousness cannot be taken lightly. The wonderful people of the trip - we were meant to be together again in a spiritual reunion. No one will be quite the same again.

At Abydos, as we went into each of the seven chapels, Marcel would hold a seven-sided crystal up while we meditated. I could visually see the crystal filling as though it were filling with water. In one of the chapels I could see people in long white robes with the head piece of a priest. They were moving around a large table of some sort.

I am full again of Egyptian vibes and memories. I can never forget that moment in time, when past experiences were re-lived.

In the Queen's chamber I was given a psychic suggestion to remove my shoes and socks and plant my bare feet on the stone floor. I laid down facing the only niche in the room. With my eyes closed, I immediately felt a vibration coming through my feet. It built up to an unhurried pounding, next to a vibration and then back to normal.

During the vibratory state, I was given another suggestion to take out an old stone I had with me that had been unearthed from the tombs in China. I was to link this with the old stone (pyramid) and through this link-up send thought energies of peace from Egypt to China.

In the King's chamber I was telepathically asked to lie down and roll up my sleeves above the elbow for direct contact with the stone floor and to take out my 14-sided Vogel-cut™ mini-crystal. I placed the crystal in my left hand, the stone relic from China in my right and again linked peace to China. At this point, I was telepathically asked to link up all the countries on the planet earth, creating a whole network of peace.

Later I layed down in the sarcophagus. It felt good having my body out flat and I let out a gentle, soft sigh. To my amazement, the sound reverberated all around and under me and resonated with the stone sarcophagus and came out sounding like an "om" though I did not mouth it this way. The interesting part of this experience was that there were people all round me yet no one else heard or felt what I privately experienced.

After we left the pyramid I reflected on my experience regarding the peace links. At this time I received more telepathic suggestions to send a peace link along the grid lines of the earth.

Exactly one week after returning from Egypt, I awoke and reached out to a book in a case by my bedside. When I opened this book, my eyes fell upon a passage relating to grid lines on the earth set up for telethought communications, which is considered instantaneous. I saw instantly in my mind's eye the whole network of grid lines lit up in a golden light.

How exciting! I am most certainly looking forward to future unfoldments.

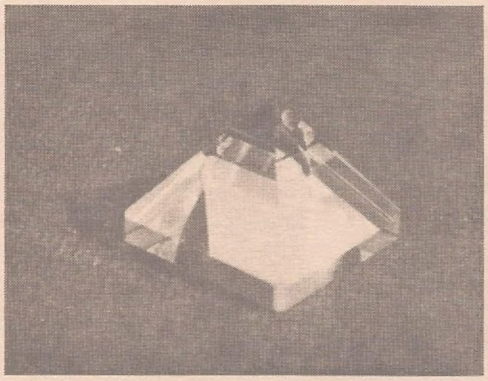
QUARTZ PYRAMIDS

Below is a picture of a quartz pyramid as cut by one of P.R.I.'s specialty crystal cutters and faceters, Maynard McGuinn, of Toledo, Ohio.



The Quartz Pyramids fit nicely in the palm of one's hand.

Maynard is responsible for the round, faceted pendants which P.R.I. developed and distributed in earlier research, microcrystals, which we are currently researching in the field of acupuncture, and mini-crystals, our smaller, less expensive version of the Vogel-Cut™ Healing Crystals which we highlighted in one of our recent newsletters.

Marcel brought 50 of these pyramids to Egypt and the travelers bought them up and asked for more. As a result, we will be selling more of these through the newsletter for the price of $25.00 each plus shipping ($2.50 in the U.S.), and tax for California residents only ($1.81).

We will be selling these pyramids for a limited time only.

ANIMAL INTELLIGENCE AND THE HEALING POWER OF COMMUNICATION

by Penelope Smith

I'd like to relay a story from my work as an Animal Communication Specialist to stretch your awareness of the intelligence of other species and illustrate the remarkable results that can come about from two-way communication and understanding of our animal friends.

Chaca was a horse who suffered from a disease of the bones in the feet called Founder, which was so severe, she was no longer able to be ridden. She now stood in one place in her pasture and did not want to eat.

Her person, Elaine, phoned me for a long distance consultation so I could telepathically communicate with Chaca and find out what we could do for her. Chaca told me she was very depressed because she felt she was no longer useful to Elaine whom she loved to serve through riding and she was lonely, even though her person still saw her daily.

I perceived her foot condition was getting worse through lack of movement, which was caused by her mental state. She needed something to live for, and since she could no longer be ridden, I suggested Elaine get Chaca an animal companion to keep her company. This seemed to interest Chaca.

Elaine followed my suggestion and borrowed a 7-year old donkey stallion named Charley, who had been kept by himself in a pasture, virtually unhandled by people. He was also very lonely.

In a short time Chaca and Charley became good friends and played around together. This companionship and exercise added a new dimension to Chaca's life, and her sore feet improved dramatically.

Well, this might have been the happy ending, except for Charley's behavior.

He was wild, destroying all Elaine's fruit trees, fences, barn siding and anything else he could chew or trample. This promised to be a difficult case, as Charley was an untrained, powerful stallion.

When I contacted Charley at a distance, he acted like a rebellious teenager, asserting himself, telling me what a wonderful time he was having, and that he wasn't going to stop his behavior for anyone. He said he loved when Elaine came out screaming after he destroyed something. It was more attention than any person had ever given him.

In the course of this conversation, Elaine explained she would have to return him to his lonely pasture if he didn't change his antics. She hated to do that because he was so unhappy there.

Charley remained stubborn until Elaine said she really loved him, and would be sorry to see him go. I immediately felt his resistance soften, and I knew we had an entryway into solving this problem.

I further expounded to Charley that Elaine really loved him, wanted him to be happy and that he needed to cooperate with her to stay in his current situation, which he enjoyed so much. He now seemed open to listening.

I asked Elaine to see Charley after we finished speaking and tell him again she loved him and detail the exact behavior she needed from him including being led around in a halter and staying for a short time in a corral.

She called the next day to tell me of the "miraculous" results. After our consultation, Charley got very quiet when she talked to him. He let her put on a halter and lead him to the corral and did not try to open the gate or monkey around as usual (Elaine had previously told me Charley was able to open any gate).

Charley lived many happy months with good behavior until earthquake disruption to his living area created havoc and he ended up going back to his old pasture.

The healing power of communication and the remarkable intelligence and sensitivity of our animal friends should not be underestimated.

Enoch" by J.J. Hurtak, I found the description of the importance of the Great Pyramid as a key to the physical and etheric grids that link us with the other dimensions. Also I was reading about the places to be symbols for the chakras.

This morning I tuned in to the temple of Karnak. I took my crystal, linked with it, with your soul and your consciousness and then with the temple. The crystal was placed in my energy field the whole morning.

There was a shift in my energies and I experienced the same frequency in my head chakra that I feel when I am going through the Stargate with the "Kadoish Adonai Sabayoth!" The whole morning I was floating in the Cosmic Heart and my heart was growing and opening.

I saw you in the temple, a fire was inflamed. You were supported and surrounded by a golden ray coming from the Pleiades. The fire then ran out of the door, building a light-line through the avenue with the sphinxes and reached a pyramid or an obelisk at the end of the Avenue. This form was brightly illuminated and the heads of all the sphinxes began to shine golden. It was so wonderful. And I could see a great joy in the galactic dimensions.

These are my experiences with you in Karnak. Thank you, that I was allowed to participate.
